INTRODUCTION

There are people among us who make things happen. We see pictures of them in our heads. They are the ones who organize and march and make impassioned speeches that often move the ball forward, when forward seems the best direction to go. But progress is also made because of other people. Some are patient and persistent. They know that the road will be long, and that they may not benefit personally when the goal is finally reached. Still others, such as Richard and Mildred Loving, approach progress from a personal need—eventually seeing their victory affecting others as well.

The Lovings did not see themselves as activists. They were a quiet married couple—he was white, she was black and Native American—living in the Virginia countryside. They were not involved in the events of the civil rights movement. Until they were roused from their bed by flashlight-bearing policemen and banished from the state, they were not likely to become symbols of that fight. But as the Lovings went from court to court to overturn state laws banning interracial marriage, their story proved symbol enough.

Forty-five years after the U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Loving v. Virginia, filmmakers Nancy Buirski and Elisabeth Haviland James bring that story to life again. “The Loving Story” includes archival footage and photos and present-day interviews, which introduce us to the Lovings and their struggle and help us reflect on the historical importance of their case.

This teaching guide includes four lessons. The first allows students to fully understand the historical context of the Lovings’ fight by exploring the time period and the sociopolitical environment. The second delves into the question of rights as they apply to the individual and to the power of the states—both important in this case. The third puts students along the path of the legal process, as the Lovings made their way through state and federal courts. In the fourth, students explore how activists can move us forward toward a more inclusive nation.
The lessons include these recurring elements:

Questions for Discussion provides a few questions to begin each lesson.

Documenting History highlights elements that are specific to documentary filmmaking. These short mini-activities will provide students with knowledge about the process and the purpose of the art form.

Vocabulary in Context points out vocabulary words and their definitions, with contextual reference points from the film.

Casework is each lesson’s main activity, will allow students to construct meaning both from their viewing of “The Loving Story” and additional research, debate and assessment strategies.

During a time when we have a multi-racial president, it may be difficult for students to understand how and why anti-miscegenation laws existed. It may be difficult for them to understand the hateful language, even from the highest offices. But they must understand that it was once this way—and that people fought back in order to move forward.

It started with a loving story.

OBJECTIVES

The lessons in this teacher’s guide will help students to:

- understand Loving v. Virginia in the context of the U.S. civil rights movement of the mid-20th century,

- develop historical empathy, or the ability to imagine what life was like for people in an earlier time,

- recognize that social change takes time, hard work and perseverance,

- apply their understanding of the Lovings’ story to current and relevant situations, and

- apply their understanding of the Lovings’ experiences and actions to their own lives, prompting them to take social action when necessary.
MEETING STANDARDS

Activities and embedded assessments address the following standards from McREL 4th edition and Common Core State Standards for English Language Arts:

McREL STANDARDS

ARTS—ART CONNECTIONS
Standard 1. Understands connections among the various art forms and other disciplines

ARTS—MUSIC
Standard 7. Understands the relationship between music and history and culture

ARTS—THEATRE
Standard 5. Understands how informal and formal theatre, film, television, and electronic media productions create and communicate meaning

Standard 28. Understands how participation in civic and political life can help citizens attain individual and public goals

GEOGRAPHY
Standard 1. Understands the characteristics and uses of maps, globes, and other geographic tools and technologies Standard 4. Understands the physical and human characteristics of place Standard 5. Understands the concept of regions

HISTORY—HISTORICAL UNDERSTANDING
Standard 1. Understands and knows how to analyze chronological relationships and patterns Standard 2. Understands the historical perspective

HISTORY—UNITED STATES HISTORY
Standard 29. Understands the struggle for racial and gender equality and for the extension of civil liberties

LANGUAGE ARTS—WRITING
Standard 1. Uses the general skills and strategies of the writing process Standard 2. Uses the stylistic and rhetorical aspects of writing Standard 4. Gathers and uses information for research purposes

LANGUAGE ARTS—READING
Standard 7. Uses skills and strategies to read a variety of informational texts
LANGUAGE ARTS—LISTENING AND SPEAKING
Standard 8. Uses listening and speaking strategies for different purposes

LANGUAGE ARTS—VIEWING
Standard 9. Uses viewing skills and strategies to understand and interpret visual media

LANGUAGE ARTS—MEDIA
Standard 10. Understands the characteristics and components of the media

LIFE SKILLS—THINKING AND REASONING
Standard 1. Understands and applies the basic principles of presenting an argument

LIFE SKILLS—WORKING WITH OTHERS
Standard 1. Contributes to the overall effort of a group
Standard 4. Displays effective interpersonal communication skills

LESSON 1

THEIR PLACE IN HISTORY

“I wasn’t involved with the civil rights movement … only thing I know was what everybody saw on the news. ... I wasn’t in anything concerning civil rights. We were trying to get back to Virginia. That was our goal—to get back home.”

—Mildred Loving

In June 1958, Richard Loving and Mildred Jeter were married in Washington, D.C. He was a white man; she was part African American and part Native American. They returned to their native Virginia to start their lives together but, as “The Loving Story” tells us, they were jailed and then banished for breaking the state’s Racial Integrity Act. By marrying beyond the state’s borders and then living together as husband and wife in Virginia, they had broken the law. The Lovings were not political people, but their wish to return home as a family placed them in the middle of a historic movement.

In Lesson 1, you will explore these essential questions:

• In what social and political context was the Loving case brought to court?
• How might events of the time have affected the outcome of the case?
• How did the verdict affect people in other states?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

In what type of community were Richard Loving and Mildred Jeter raised?

In the film, how is that community described?

How did the couple’s neighbors and other community members view them?

How did the Lovings view themselves?

DOCUMENTING HISTORY

A key element of this documentary is Hope Ryden’s 1965 footage of Richard and Mildred Loving as they interact with their children, meet with their lawyers and speak with reporters about their case. Its use is an example of cinema verité, French for “truthful cinema,” in which real people are filmed in unrehearsed situations to capture the reality of a moment.

VOCABULARY IN CONTEXT

malay [mey-ley] (noun) the native peoples of Malaysia, Indonesia, the Philippines, and other parts of Southeast Asia and Oceania; once classified as the “brown race” in the now-outdated theory that humans can be divided into five races according to skin color

“Almighty God created the races—white, black, yellow, malay and red—and He placed them on separate continents.”

—Virginia Circuit Court Judge Leon M. Bazile

miscegenation [mi-sej-u-ney-shuh n] (noun) marriage or cohabitation between a man and a woman of different races, likely to result in mixed-race children

“The legal term is miscegenation—and those who support such [anti-miscegenation] laws claim they are necessary in order to preserve the purity of the races.”

—CBS News reporter Robert Pierpoint of a moment or event in history. How do you think the film would have been different if the Lovings had been portrayed by actors, or if a narrator had described their feelings about their situation? What does watching and listening to the Lovings themselves tell you about their everyday life, their character and their goals for the future?

CASEWORK
1. This map of the United States (pg. 10) shows which states had anti-miscegenation laws when the Lovings married in June 1958. Some of those states repealed their laws before the Supreme Court issued its ruling in Loving v. Virginia. Others waited until the ruling forced their repeal, and several states even left the laws, now unenforceable, on their books for more than 30 years. Study the map and, together, answer the following questions:

Which region of the country includes most of the states that still barred interracial marriage at the time of the ruling?
Historically, what do most of those states have in common?
How might that commonality be linked to the idea of “racial integrity”?

2. In pairs or small groups, choose one of the states that had an anti-miscegenation law and explore that law. One group should choose your own state if it had such a law. Specifically, research the following:
• In addition to African Americans, were other races or ethnicities mentioned in the law?
• Did the law cover interracial couples from outside the state?
• When was the law written? When was it repealed?
• Was the law ever repealed and later reinstated?
• What was the punishment for breaking the law?

As a class, share and discuss the information you found. Did anything surprise or shock you?
How did the various laws compare in breadth, language and the terms of punishment?

3. The anti-miscegenation laws were just one of the race-based injustices being questioned during the civil rights era. There were movements against the segregation of public schools and transportation systems. Thousands of black and white Americans gathered in the nation’s capital to push for change, and leaders began to emerge who would make that change happen. To understand the social and historical context of the Lovings’ fight, you will study a visual timeline of the civil rights era. In pairs or small groups, study the timeline (pg. 11).

4. Using the timeline as your guide, gather online images that represent the different events on it and store them in a computer folder for easy access. Note the source of each image.
Then, add them to the timeline in the appropriate places. Add the Loving case to the timeline.

5. Display your timelines. What do they tell you about the period during which the Lovings were challenging Virginia’s Racial Integrity Act? Do you think these events had a positive or negative impact on the Loving case? Would their lawyers have succeeded in a different time period, a period before the civil rights movement? Defend your answers.
Anti-miscegenation laws were repealed after 1958 but prior to the 1967 Supreme Court ruling.

States with anti-miscegenation laws: NC, VA, MO, AR, LA, MS, AL, GA, FL, SC, NC, TN, KY, WV, OH, IN, WI, MI, IA, MN, SD, NE, CO, NM, AZ, CA, OR, WA, HI.

THE QUESTION OF RIGHTS

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

—Section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution

The tension between government power and individual rights has been a defining feature of American democracy. Richard and Mildred Loving felt they had the right, as other Virginia citizens did, to marry and live together as a family within the state. The state said its “racial integrity” law superseded those rights.

With Lesson 2, you will explore these essential questions:

• What was the historical context of Virginia’s Racial Integrity Act?
• What tension is created by the power of the state versus the rights of the individual?
• What rights did the U.S. Supreme Court ruling uphold?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

The section of the 14th Amendment quoted above is known as the Equal Protection Clause. How do you interpret it? The clause refers to the protection of life and liberty. What freedoms do you think are inherent within each? What is a privilege? What is a right? How do they differ?

DOCUMENTING HISTORY

Most documentaries include interviews with people who have a variety of perspectives on an issue. The director and producers of “The Loving Story” have woven in interviews with people as diverse as law-enforcement officers, farmers, historians, family friends and lawyers. How do you think this documentary element helps the viewer understand the attorney general

[uh-tur-nee jen-er-uh l]

(noun) the top law officer of the country

“When Mr. and Mrs. Loving were having their problems, they wrote to the attorney general of the United States, who was then Robert Kennedy, and asked if the civil-rights bills that were being discussed in Congress at that time ... would give them any relief.”

central issue? What does each “witness” bring to the story? Compare the interviews of lawyers Bernard Cohen and Philip Hirschkop at the time that the case was argued and much later, as they reflected on the case. What do you notice? How does their later reflection add to our understanding of the case and its historical standing?

CASEWORK
1. The 14th Amendment of the Constitution, including the Equal Protection Clause, was enacted after slavery was abolished but when many former Confederate states had adopted what were called Black Codes. The laws codified many inequities against black people, including limiting their rights to own property and serve on juries. The Equal Protection Clause was a response to these laws. It restrained the power of state governments to infringe on individual rights, and it reinforced the idea that all citizens were equal under the law. Discuss the tension that was created between the state of Virginia, with its laws against interracial marriage, and the Lovings. What did the Lovings see as their rights? What did Virginia see as its legitimate use of power?

2. The case also represents a tension seen throughout U.S. history: the need for authority versus the need to put restrictions on authority when it threatens individual freedoms. Both sides in the Loving case argued for government intervention, but for different reasons. Divide into two groups, with one group focusing on Virginia’s arguments and the other group studying the justification by the Lovings’ lawyers. Within your groups, watch the film from the time the case goes to the U.S. Supreme Court and through the arguments made by each side before the court. Take notes when that will help you explain each side’s arguments.

3. Now, do further research to check the accuracy and expand your knowledge of your group’s argument.

For the state of Virginia:
• What did it argue should be preserved among its citizens?
• To whom did it say the law applied?
• Who did it think needed protection from interracial marriage?

For the Lovings:
• What did their lawyers argue had been violated?
• What previous case had created a precedent for striking down Virginia’s law?

inequity [in-ek-wi-tee] (noun) unfairness or bias

“They come united in one cause—to urge Congress to pass a civil-rights bill to end forever the blight of racial inequity.”

—Television news report on the March on Washington integrity [in-teg-ri-tee] (noun) the state of being whole and undivided discernible [dih-sur-nuh-buhl] (adjective) capable of being recognized

“The rule was that if there was a discernible trace of non-white blood, then the person was legally classified as non-white; that in order to be white, one had to be 99.9 percent pure. What Virginia referred to as a Racial Integrity Act was more accurately a white-supremacy act.”

—Historian Robert Pratt

jurisdiction [joo-ris-dik-shuhn] (noun) the territory over which authority is exercised

“The federal District Court in Richmond has sent us back to the state courts and retained jurisdiction of your case at the same time.”

—ACLU lawyer Bernard Cohen, to Mildred Loving
4. With your groups, share the arguments that each side used to support their case in front of the U.S. Supreme Court. As a class, refer back to the Equal Protection Clause. Were the Lovings’ lawyers assured of winning based on its language? Why or why not? How might the state of Virginia have gotten around the language? Why wasn’t it successful?

5. From the film or from print or Internet sources, review the Supreme Court’s ruling in Loving v. Virginia. How did each justice vote? What did the ruling say? What did Chief Justice Earl Warren write about the institution of marriage?

6. Loving v. Virginia is seen as a historic court case but, as the film shows, it is also one that moves people personally. Why do you think that is? How does it affect you? Does the Lovings’ fight still have relevance today? Individually or in pairs, communicate your opinions in a school newspaper column, two-person debate, a set of song lyrics or an advocacy advertisement.
LESSON 3

THE LEGAL PROCESS

“He [Richard Loving] just wanted me to go see Judge Bazile and convince Judge Bazile to let them come back in Virginia. When I told him I didn’t think it was gonna work that way, and that I thought this case was likely to go to the Supreme Court of the United States, his jaw about dropped.”

—ACLU lawyer Bernard Cohen

There are many ways to secure fair treatment under the law, including marches, boycotts, civil disobedience and the courts. Richard and Mildred Loving were convicted of violating a law that prohibited interracial marriage. Because they wanted to live together legally as husband and wife in Virginia, their home state, they took their struggle through the court system all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In Lesson 3, you will explore these essential questions:

• Why did the Lovings use the courts to secure the right to live together as husband and wife in Virginia?
• How did the Lovings’ lawyers make their case?
• What did the Loving case demonstrate about federal versus state authority?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

What is the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU)? What was its role in the Loving case?

What path did the Loving case follow through the courts? Why is that path important?

How did the Supreme Court rule? What were the effects of the ruling?

DOCUMENTING HISTORY

The filmmakers of “The Loving Story” have created a film that is both informative and emotionally moving. One element that contributes to the film’s effectiveness is music. For this activity, look and listen closely to the segment, early in the film, when Richard and Mildred Loving describe getting arrested and taken to jail. What feeling do you get when you watch and listen to that part of the film? What mood does the music help create? Now watch or imagine the scene without abdicating [ab-di-keyt-ing] (verb) formally relinquishing authority

“I think he’s abdicating his federal authority to the state.”
—ACLU lawyer Philip Hirschkop

vacate [vey-keyt] (verb) to make legally void

“We filed a motion ... to vacate the judgment of conviction and to set aside the sentence.”
—ACLU lawyer Bernard Cohen
the music. How does it feel different? Think about different music you might use with the scene. How would it affect the mood?

Note: When you want to analyze the workings of a movie, you might want to watch it more than once so that you can focus on the particular elements that make the movie “work.”

CASEWORK
1. The American Civil Liberties Union played a key role in the Loving case. What are civil liberties? Read about the ACLU. With a group, make a list of some of the cases it has represented or currently represents. Based on what you know now about the ACLU and about the Lovings, why did the ACLU take on the Loving case?

2. With your group, fill in the Loving case flow chart (pg. 17) that shows how the Loving case moved through the courts. When you've placed the events in the correct order, color-code the boxes, using one color to show when the issue involved a state court and a different color to show when the issue involved a federal court. Write a one-sentence explanation of each step of the process to show you understand it. If you need more information about the judicial process, visit the White House website where the process is explained. Write an answer to this question: Why was the Loving case decided at the federal level rather than the state level?

3. With an understanding of the judicial process regarding the Loving case, take a closer look at the argument that the ACLU lawyers used to challenge the constitutionality of Virginia's Racial Integrity Act. Answer these questions, either in a class discussion or in writing:
   - Explain what ACLU lawyer Philip Hirschkop meant when he said he feared that the court would declare the Lovings' jail sentence unconstitutional but not address whether or not the law was constitutional.
   - What does the 14th Amendment say?
   - How was the Loving case related to the 14th Amendment?
   - Why did ACLU lawyer Bernard Cohen say that Judge Bazile's statement about God separating the races was a gift to their case?

EXTENSION RESEARCH ACTIVITY
There have been many times in American history when people have brought cases to the courts to question a law’s constitutionality. Brown v. Board of Education challenged segregation. Roe v. Wade challenged laws prohibiting abortion. Lawrence v. Texas challenged anti-gay laws. Research one of these cases, or a different one, subject to your teacher's approval. Report to the class about the case. Be sure to answer these questions: What was the case called? What law did it challenge? When did the case come before the U.S. Supreme Court? How did the Court rule? How did the Court explain its decision? Based on student reports, discuss the following question: Why is using the legal process to challenge laws sometimes considered to be controversial? Do you think it should be? Why or why not?

THE EVENTS OF THE LOVING CASE

• Lovings seek help from the ACLU.

• Lovings are convicted of breaking Virginia anti-miscegenation law and are banished from the state.

• Lovings, with help of ACLU, appeal to federal district court.

• Judge Bazile denies Lovings’ request to vacate their sentence and issues statement affirming that the races should be separate.

• U.S. Supreme Court rules that anti-miscegenation laws violate the U.S. Constitution.

• Federal court sends Lovings back to the Virginia Supreme Court, saying the anti-miscegenation law is a state matter.

• Lovings marry.

• Lovings appeal to local judge to vacate their sentence.

• Virginia Supreme Court upholds the constitutionality of the state’s anti-miscegenation law.

• Lovings are arrested.

• ACLU lawyers argue Loving case before the U.S. Supreme Court.

THE POWER OF ACTIVISTS

“It’s not so much about me and Richard because we could go away. But it’s the principle; it’s the law. I don’t think it’s right. And if we do win, we will be helping a lot of people.”

—Mildred Loving

Mildred and Richard Loving were ordinary citizens who did not think of themselves as political activists. As Mildred said, “I just wanted to go back home.” But Mildred’s letter to Attorney General Robert Kennedy led them to the American Civil Liberties Union, and their efforts to go back home led to a Supreme Court ruling that changed laws all over the country.

In Lesson 4, you will explore these essential questions:

- What was the Lovings’ goal? How did their view of its implications change as their case moved through the courts?
- How is the Loving case similar to and different from today’s marriage-equality debates?
- How can a film inspire people to take action against injustice?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

Why do “ordinary people” become activists? What would motivate you to become an activist?

What can you learn about today’s political debates about marriage from the Loving case?

DOCUMENTING HISTORY

The filmmakers of “The Loving Story” have written: “Leveraging our film into advocacy and action is essential to fulfilling our original intent: to inform, to educate, to move or call to action.” It isn’t difficult to see how “The Loving Story” informs and educates viewers about Mildred and Richard Loving and the case that became Loving v. Virginia. But does “The Loving Story” move viewers (like you) to action? Think about how the film depicts the Lovings. Is the depiction sympathetic? Support your answer with evidence from the film—a scene or a specific shot featuring one or both of the Lovings. Find a part of the film that you find particularly moving, something that would inspire you to take action yourself. Explain what it is that moves you, and what kind of action it might spur you to take.

VOCABULARY IN CONTEXT

bond [bond] (noun) a written promise to pay a sum of money to secure the release of a criminal defendant from jail and to guarantee the defendant’s appearance in court

“We were under a thousand-dollar bond, and his sister got a bonding company to get him out.”

—Mildred Loving

odious [oh-dee-us] (adjective) hateful

“You have before you today what we consider the most odious of the segregation laws and the slavery laws.”

—ACLU lawyer Philip Hirschkop in argument before the Supreme Court
CASEWORK
1. The Lovings began their legal journey for very personal reasons. Find the scene in the film in which ACLU attorney Bernard Cohen reads aloud the letter that Mildred Loving sent to Attorney General Robert Kennedy. How did she describe the problem she and Richard faced? How did she think Kennedy might be able to help? In the film, how did Cohen and fellow attorney Philip Hirschkop explain why they took the Loving case and why they believed it was important? Over time, how did Richard’s and Mildred’s views about the legal case change—and how did their views remain the same?

2. Today the question of who can get married is still controversial. Now the legal struggle has shifted from interracial marriage to same-sex marriage. Look at the map (pg. 21) to see where same-sex couples can legally wed. (Note: Divide the class into eight groups. Assign each group one of the places where same-sex marriage is legal.) With your group, research the process by which your assigned place legalized same-sex marriage. To guide your research, use Comparing Legal Issues: Interracial Marriage and Same-Sex Marriage (pg. 22). It will also help you see how the current situation compares to what you’ve seen in “The Loving Story.” Present your findings to the class.

3. Now take your work a step further. As a class, form three teams. Imagine that a case regarding same-sex marriage has made its way to the U.S. Supreme Court, as the Loving case did. Have one team present its argument to strike down laws that ban same-sex marriage. Have a second team present its argument to keep such laws in place. Use what you learned in your research about arguments for and against same-sex marriage, as well as what you learned about Loving v. Virginia, to inform your work. The third team will take the role of the U.S. Supreme Court. The “justices” should listen carefully to each side’s argument and ask questions to clarify understanding or to challenge the argument. After the court presentations, have the justices meet privately to make their decision. Have one justice present the final decision. Use as a model the ruling in Loving v. Virginia—but keep your argument to about a page.

4. As marriage rights once again become part of the national conversation, do you think Loving v. Virginia could be applied in the future? If so, how? If not, why not? Individually or in pairs, communicate your opinions in an op-ed piece, a speech or an editorial cartoon.

EXTENSION ACTIVITY
Step back from the Loving case and think more broadly about why people become activists. Write a journal entry answering some of these questions: If you’ve ever taken action to bring about change, why did you do it? How were your reasons similar to and different from the Lovings’ reasons? If you haven’t ever taken such action, think about a situation you believe is unjust. What would move you to take action, as the Lovings took action? Would you be more likely to take action if the injustice affected you or someone you loved than if it seemed to be a more distant problem? Why or why not?

ABOUT US

THE SOUTHERN POVERTY LAW CENTER is a nonprofit organization that combats hate, intolerance and discrimination through education and litigation.

TEACHING TOLERANCE, a project of Southern Poverty Law Center, is dedicated to reducing prejudice, improving intergroup relations and supporting equitable school experiences for our nation’s children.

The program provides free educational materials to educators for use by millions of students. Teaching Tolerance magazine is sent to 450,000 educators, reaching every school in the country, twice annually. Tens of thousands of educators use the program’s film kits and more than 5,000 schools participate in the annual Mix It Up at Lunch Day program.

Teaching Tolerance teaching materials have won two Oscars, an Emmy and more than 20 honors from the Association of Educational Publishers, including two Golden Lamp Awards, the industry’s highest honor.

The generosity of the Southern Poverty Law Center’s supporters makes our work possible.

TEACHING THE MOVEMENT

The civil rights movement is one of the defining events in American history—a bracing example of Americans fighting for the ideals of justice and equality. Teaching the civil rights movement is essential to ensuring that American history is relevant to students in an increasingly diverse nation.

Teaching Tolerance undertook a comprehensive review—the first of its kind—of the coverage accorded the civil rights movement in state educational standards and curriculum frameworks. The results of that review are set out in Teaching the Movement: The State of Civil Rights Education in the United States 2011. It provides a national report card on the state of civil rights education in our country. Most states, unfortunately, received a failing grade.
